Rachel Caspar is Director of the Program for Research in Survey Methodology at RTI International. She joined RTI in 1988 after completing her Masters degree in Applied Social Research at the University of Michigan. As a survey methodologist, Rachel's work has focused on the development and implementation of new methods for collecting survey data to maximize data quality, increase response, reduce burden, and reduce costs. She is especially interested in designing questionnaires and developing data collection procedures for surveys of sensitive topics. Since 2004 Rachel has served as the PI for the National Inmate Survey, working closely with the Bureau of Justice Statistics to oversee all aspects of the design and implementation of this congressionally-mandated study to measure incidence of sexual victimization among the adult incarcerated population in the United States. Rachel has served as a member of RTI's Institutional Review Board for 12 years.

Rachel regularly teaches courses in questionnaire design and testing. She has taught short courses at past AAPOR conferences as well as at the Joint Statistical Meetings. Rachel has also taught at UNC – Chapel Hill and at the Summer Institute in Survey Research Techniques sponsored by the Institute for Social Research.

Rachel joined AAPOR and attended her first conference in 1987 and has been an active participant and contributor since then. She previously served on AAPOR Executive Council in the role of Membership/Chapter Relations Chair. Rachel has also served on the board of the Survey Research Methods Section of the American Statistical Association twice (once as Education Chair and once as the Section Representative to the Council of Sections) and was a member of ASA's Continuing Education Committee.
